

ON A KENTUCKY FARM.

Associations of Anti-Slavery Boyhood.

"Mammy," the Cook, "Uncle Tom."

The typical boy on a Kentucky farm was tenderly associated from infancy with the negroes of the household and the fields. His old black "mammy" became almost his first mother and was but slowly crowded out of his conscience and his heart by the growing image of the true one. She had perhaps nursed him at her breast when he was not long enough to stretch across it, sung over his cradle at noon and at midnight, taken him out upon the velvet grass beneath the shade of the elm trees to watch his first manly resolution of standing alone in the world and walking the vast distance of some inches. Often in boyish years when flying from the house with a loud appeal from the incomprehensible code of Anglo-Saxon punishment for small misdemeanors he had run to those black arms and cried himself to sleep in the lap of African sympathy. As he grew older, alas! his first love grew faithless, and while "mammy" was good enough in her way and sphere his wandering affections settled humbly at the feet of another great functionary of the household—the cook in the kitchen. To him her keys were as the keys to the kingdom of heaven, for his immortal soul was his immortal appetite. When he stood by the biscuit bench while she, pausing amid the varied industries that went into the preparation of a Kentucky supper, made him marvelous guesses of dough, with farinaceous features and genuine coffee grains for eyes, there was to him no other artist in the world who possessed the secret of so commingling the useful with the beautiful.

The little half naked imp, too, playing in the dirt like glossy blackbirds taking a bath of dust, were his sweetest—because, perhaps, forbidden—companions. With them he went clandestinely to the fatal duck pond in the stable lot, to learn the art of swimming on a walnut rail. With them he raced up and down the lane on blooded alder stalk horses, afterward leading the exhausted couriers into stables of the same green bushes and halting there high with a cotton string. It was one of these halting children of original Guinea that had crept up to him as he lay asleep in the summer grass and told him where the best hidden of all nests was to be found in a far fence corner—that of the high tempered, sordid guinea hen. To them he showed his first Barlow knife; for them he blew his first home made whistle. He is their petty tyrant today; to-morrow he will be their repentant friend, dividing with them his marbles and proposing a game of hop scotch. Upon his dullest, his disposition, his whole character, is laid the ineffable impress of theirs, so that they pass into the final reckoning up of his life here and in the world to come.

But Uncle Tom—the negro overseer of the place—the greatest of all the negroes—greater even than the cook, when one is not hungry. How often has he straddled Uncle Tom's neck, or ridden behind him on a barebacked horse to the flinging music of the trace chains! It is Uncle Tom who brings him his first young squirrel to tame, the teeth of which are soon to be planted in his right forefinger. Many a time he slips out of the house to take his dinner or supper in the cabin with Uncle Tom; and during long winter evenings he loves to sit before those great roaring cabin fireplaces, to throw their red and yellow lights over the half circle of black faces and on the mysteries of broom making, chair bottoming and the cobbling of shoes. Like the child who listens to "Uncle Remus," he too hears songs and stories, and creeps back to the house with a wondering look in his eyes and a vague hush of spirit.—James Lane Allen in The Century.

How Volapuk Sounds.

Much as I have heard and read about Volapuk, the new language which Mr. Schleyer hopes to be a universal, I never heard it talked until last week, when, among the guests at the hospitable table of a well known medical man of literary tastes, there were two guests who had actually sat at the feet of the inventor of Volapuk, so to speak, and related the impression of what I heard. One of the guests suggested that Volapuk sounded like double Dutch spoken by a Choctaw Indian suffering from a chronic cough, while another suggested it was more like a Welshman trying to cough in modern Greek; but it must not be supposed that I endorse their evidently exaggerated statements. Seriously, however, I do not think that Volapuk sounded like the universal language of the future, though I must say that many of its words seem taken from roots common to our own and the German language.—London Figaro.

Example of Chinese Cruelty.

A sample of Chinese justice is afforded by the case of a half witted youth who, in an attack of epilepsy, fatally injured his father. The Chinese law decrees that a son who murders his father, whether he be sane or insane, shall suffer the lingering death—that is, his body is sliced with knives and the torture prolonged for hours. A parallel atrocity was furnished by the sentence to the same torture of a young Chinese woman who killed her father-in-law while he was attempting to assault her.—San Francisco Chronicle.
